

The National Black Women's HIV/AIDS Network, Inc. Launches Newly Designed Website to Educate, Engage and Empower Black Women and Girls

February 19, 2015: The National Black Women's HIV/AIDS Network, Inc., the preeminent advocacy organization for Black women and girls with, or affected by HIV/AIDS in the nation, announces the launch of their newly designed website at www.nbwhan.org. This new website offers online visitors quick and easy access to important information and features a blog page, links to our social media outlets, and tools to assist visitors to access resources in their local communities.

"I'm very proud to unveil the new website design," said Deborah Levine, Board Secretary and Social Media Manager for the organization. "Our goal was to create a site that allows for a very positive user experience while providing important useful information. We hope that the new website becomes a resource for Black women and girls and for the men who love them."

The website will be updated routinely to keep the information fresh and up to date.

About the National Black Women's HIV/AIDS Network, Inc.

The National Black Women's HIV/AIDS Network, Inc., is organized to provide leadership and expertise in the prevention and spread of HIV/AIDS and other health disparities that affect black women and girls nationally and internationally. Our mission is to reduce the burden of morbidity, mortality and stigma of HIV/AIDS and other health disparities associated with gender, social, and economic inequities among Black women and girls.
